As a matter of fact, the United States census of manufactures for 1914, the latest report available, shows that there is practically twice as much capital invested in manufacturing industries in Louisville as in Birmingham. It is also interesting to note that this same census which reported $89,957,000 invested in manufacturing establishments in Louisville, showed that in the matter of capital invested Louisville in 1914 was a more important manufacturing center than other cities of between 200,000 and 300,000 population such as Kansas City, Indianapolis, St. Paul, Denver, Portland and Columbus. Louisville also showed better than all of the cities named, with the exception of Indianapolis, in number of persons engaged in manufactures, in salaries and wages paid, in cost of materials used, in value of products and primary horse power. The chief industries of Louisville are the manufacture of agricultural implements and...
