Excerpt: .none of its evil; with all of its gladness and none of its grief; with all of its love, and none of those things which in this world frequently make love so cruel, so heart-breaking. S the dying seed becomes the plumed and fruitful tree, as the mouldering chrysalis becomes a winged and radiant creature, so our vile bodies shall be changed and made like unto Christ s glorious body. Our bodies! These eyes shall behold, and not another. Bodies very different, yet identical. I have the same body that once lay a chubby babe asleep in its cradle. This is the same body that shall totter, weak and broken, to the grave. And it is the same body that shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ. The material particles ever changing, the identity ever unquestioned. Marcus Aurelius had five Christians burnt--a bishop, a deacon, a physician, a slave, and a child. He mixed their ashes and threw them into the sea. But Marcus Aurelius cannot frustrate God. The Creator can gather up particles whence he will, and clothe the living, self-conscious, undying soul with its own body, perfected and spiritualized. When God says, Come again, ye children of men! then will they come. The sailor from the coral reef, the soldier bleaching on the desert, the martyrs dust, shall not be forgotten then. The ashes which Marcus Aurelius mixed with the waters, the dry dust from marble urns, the mummied dead from...
